Town of Arlington Named Best City for Young Families in Tennessee

Web resource, NerdWallet.com, recently named the Town of Arlington the 'Best City for Young Families in Tennessee.' NerdWallet focused on several factors, including home affordability and quality of education, but pointed out the high growth in prosperity and family friendliness in Arlington. Out of 99 cities in Tennessee, Arlington was the only place in which over fifty (50%) percent of the households included kids.

"People want to live where there are great schools, parks, and a sense of community pride," said Mayor Mike Wissman. "Arlington offers all of those elements plus more to its citizens. We are very proud and excited to be a destination for young families."

This is the second time in the past year that NerdWallet has recognized the Town of Arlington as a great place to live. In March 2014, the Town was named 'Best City for Homeownership in Tennessee' because of its high homeownership rate, low property taxes, and ample amount of job opportunities.
